

Jap Civilians on Tinian Surrender After Promised Water by Marines

By Fritz Irving Schlossberg
Special Correspondent

Tinian, Marianas Islands (Delayed)—More than a thousand Japanese civilians had lined up in the temporary stockade, and even the youngest had only one word on their lips: "Water, water!" "Water, water!"

Since before dawn a jeep equipped with loud speakers had blatted down ravines, into caves and into the shaded areas where the frightened civilians had hidden since Marines invaded their island.

Breakdown in Atmosphere

Marines officers, as usual, were not to be seen. They were in the rear, and the front line was made up of young privates and corporals. The men broke into loud cheering as the jeep, in some cases, had been out of sight for several minutes. The cheering died away as the jeep disappeared. The men would come to their feet and look toward the rear of the jeep. They were silent and motionless, and some were weeping.

The civilians had gathered to the rear of the jeep and were shouting their few belongings and their few belongings. They were shouting their few belongings and their few belongings. They were shouting their few belongings and their few belongings.

They Came Out at Night

The men came out at night. They were silent and motionless, and some were weeping. They were silent and motionless, and some were weeping.

City Soldier Is With Sea-Going Unit in Pacific

Robert J. Brown, 21, of Spokane, Wash., who had been in the Pacific since he was 17, is the only soldier in the unit. He is the only soldier in the unit. He is the only soldier in the unit.

Water Goes to Sea

The water goes to sea. The water goes to sea. The water goes to sea. The water goes to sea.

Families Sheltered

The families are sheltered. The families are sheltered. The families are sheltered. The families are sheltered.

Seventeen Families Sheltered by City Residents

Seventeen families are sheltered by city residents. Seventeen families are sheltered by city residents. Seventeen families are sheltered by city residents.

MISS JEAN DICKEYSON

MISS JEAN DICKEYSON, 17, of the American Legion, is the only girl in the unit. She is the only girl in the unit. She is the only girl in the unit.

Clipped By:

astrothalexander
Sun, Feb 25, 2018